Sunday, January 10, 2014 Indian Airline Privatisation: The August 2008 UDAN award was not transparent Already brimming with cynicism, I am greatly disappointed by the way the UP government has been handling this issue. Actually, I am disillusioned. I trust the obvious hype and publicity of the UDAN scheme is a product of the media and UP government itself. I had got the impression they knew that these awards were not going to work as promised. And I had this feeling because of the way two of my friends were welcomed back from USA after the golden jubilee in a day to celebrate by this Chief Minister. I am sure a more sincere, transparent and fair evaluation is not in our government's genes. Predictably, small towns are getting all the money. And the same cities continue to welcome new and old jet airliners. Honestly, if you win, you don't get the money. If you lose, the government as well as the public will accuse you and you will have to face the music. Granted, no one would have complained if Jaipur or Agra got the same, and no one would object if not Ahmedabad got anything, but we were thinking it would be some new towns and cities that would get the money. Instead, most of the money has gone to small towns, with the cities that didn't get any complaining, surprisingly, not a single complaint. I am not surprised. Wouldn't the Cabinet approve it if this was not coming from an elected government? So what is the problem? The thing is, the money is not going to be distributed by the government at the right time and in the right manner. The money will go to the flight plan approved by the Cabinet, and the plans can come from even a different government - be it the Centre or the State government. And it is the duty of the Cabinet to distribute the money. No matter how good the intentions, if the Cabinet is not doing it, the government doesn't have the authority to spend the money as well. Hence, the best thing that could happen is that the government owns up to its
