At least nine people have been killed in a bloody attack at an upscale shopping mall in Sri Lanka, where as many as 200 others were feared trapped. The Sri Lankan army says a van filled with explosives detonated at the Shangri-La Hotel and nearby shops in the tourist center. The van reportedly blew up as the hotel was crowded with guests. Officials say the attack started at about 3 p.m. and ended at about 5 p.m., CBS News' Barbara Bry reports from Colombo, Sri Lanka. Witnesses said they heard loud explosions and the smell of gunpowder. Some heard screams. At least two shoppers told CBS News they were able to escape because of the strong undercurrents in the high-end shopping mall. The attack came two days after a suicide bomber on board a crowded commuter train killed at least eight people and injured more than 100 others in Colombo. Saturday's attack occurred on the 22nd anniversary of the Easter Sunday bombing of hotels, churches and the suburb of Colombo. Get Breaking News Delivered to Your Inbox Shangri-La is a five-star hotel that is popular with Sri Lanka's elite, earning itself a reputation as "Asia's Largest Hotel" among business travelers. Security at the hotel is said to be very tight due to terrorist threats. A hotel manager, who asked to remain anonymous, told CBS News that hundreds of travelers from the hotel had been evacuated to a nearby sports club. The manager said that security forces are beefing up their security, but that he did not believe the hotel was under specific threat. CBS News' Benjamin Gittleson reports that the city's biggest newspaper, The Daily Mirror, ran a warning on the front page, "We are all targets." The country's former president was planning to visit the hotel on Saturday. President Maithripala Sirisena announced this morning that the visit had been canceled. Shangri-La's British-owned parent company said in a statement, "We are deeply shocked and saddened by this senseless act of violence and our thoughts and deepest sympathies go to the families of the victims." "Shangri-La Hotels & Resorts operates in more than 130 countries around the world and has a longstanding reputation for providing world
