The Blob (1981 film) The Blob (original title: La Blob) is a 1981 American horror film directed by John Carpenter and released by American International Pictures as the first sequel to Invasion of the Body Snatchers (1978). The plot follows a group of teenagers who encounter a strange amoeba-like organism invading San Francisco. Plot In 1967, a mysterious amoeba-like organism is discovered in the nearby ocean, and sent to the Los Angeles Biomedical Institute under the assumption that it is a biological weapon. Two graduate scientists, Dr. Michael Turner (Tom Atkins) and Dr. Kenneth Engel (Ronnie Claire Edwards), study the organism. A researcher named Jerry is sent to help build the creature a habitat to grow. The hope is that the creature will be useful in testing new medical treatments for the planet. One year later, Jerry and his wife, Christine (Anita Brizzolara) are watching their infant son, Tommy, who suffers from infantile convulsions. After cleaning Tommy's hands, Christine begins to develop a terrible, insidious disease. The following day, Christine learns that she has the rare blood type that cannot tolerate the amoeba-like organism. She dies the next day. Upon hearing the news, Tommy begins to convulse and his eyes turn red. Dr. Turner, who is in charge of protecting Tommy, awakens the boy before he convulses, and discovers that the boy has absorbed the amoeba-like organism. Tommy's hair begins
