Dreamweaver Dreamweaver is one of the most widely used programs to design and build Web sites. Unfortunately, it was a very hit-and-miss program. It had the best design capabilities but was inferior in a lot of other areas, including its user interface. On the plus side, Dreamweaver is the only web development tool that truly works with both Web standards and classic CSS. You can also build Flash-based applications.

Characteristics and outcomes of concealed heart disease in women. Data on the characteristics and outcomes of women with concealed heart disease are limited. We sought to determine the characteristics and outcomes of women with asymptomatic left ventricular dysfunction. Women referred to a cardiovascular screening clinic who had a transthoracic echocardiogram and serum N-terminal pro b-type natriuretic peptide (NT-proBNP) levels >200 pg/mL (n=110) were prospectively followed. Among these women, 13 (11%) were found to have left ventricular dysfunction on echocardiography and were also found to have a history of heart disease (diabetes mellitus n=5, hypertension n=3, prior coronary artery bypass graft [CABG] surgery n=7). Median age of the 13 women was 71 years and median NT-proBNP level was 1260 pg/mL. Seven women (54%) had New York Heart Association functional class I symptoms. Median duration of follow-up was 4.3 years (range 0.6-16.0 years). Nine women (69%) had an event during follow-up (cardiac death n=6, CABG surgery n=3) and seven (54%) died. Survival was significantly less for the 13 women compared to other patients with a detectable NT-proBNP (log-rank p=0.01) and as compared to other women with similar NT-proBNP levels who did not undergo cardiac testing (log-rank p=0.003). In conclusion, women with undetectable NT-proBNP levels frequently have asymptomatic left ventricular dysfunction. They are at increased risk of subsequent cardiovascular events and cardiac death. Women with asymptomatic left ventricular dysfunction who have undetectable NT-proBNP levels and a low probability of myocardial infarction on nuclear stress testing are at very low risk of underlying cardiovascular disease, and thus should not be routinely screened for coronary artery disease.

Is Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia's income growth sustainable over time? The company's revenue growth has slowed for the last five quarters, though the market's attention to the brand hasn't diminished. NEW YORK (TheStreet) -- Media is a rapidly changing field, and the print, television and movie industries have all undergone major shifts in the past few years. So has Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia. The company, the owner of Martha Stewart's eponymous lifestyle magazine and the Martha Stewart Living television network, has been among those hardest hit in the media market, struggling to grow revenue and keep pace with the changing media climate. Last quarter marked the first time the company's revenue growth slowed since it began reporting quarterly results. Revenue came in at $175.5 million, an increase of 3% over the prior quarter, but down from the 13% growth rate the company posted in the year-ago quarter. The slowdown was partly attributed to a shift from original content deals, which are often more expensive than licensing content to an existing media brand, but so far the company is able to maintain or increase revenue. The company's year-to-year results for the third quarter of 2012 are expected to come out on or about Nov. 15. Most of Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia's business consists of the company's direct-sales business, which generates revenue mainly from retail sales of the company's home, lifestyle and gardening product lines, as well as sales of branded candles and other merchandise made under the Martha Stewart Living brand name. The company's market-share gains came at the expense of rival McCormick & Company, whose revenue came in at $327.7 million, an increase of 2.7%. However, the company's average revenue per customer (ARPAC), or how much customers spend on its products, has stayed relatively flat. The ARPAC figure measures the company's performance in units sold, not marketing spend, and is often used as a comparison figure when judging a company's performance. In the most recent quarter, the average revenue per customer was $167.38, up slightly from $165.92 the prior quarter. The company's profit grew, boosted by increases in its marketing and sales departments as well as the growth of its market-share. That margin was up 2.3 percentage points from the prior quarter, to 38.8%. The company also reported a loss of $90.9 million,
